

Rebecca Wimberly is nationally certified as a Frequency Specific Micro-current (FSM) therapist.

FSM is a non-invasive alternative rehabilitative, performance enhancing and preventative method with the objective to help a client's body heal itself. I do not claim to be or use other therapies. This method is not intended to diagnose or guarantee to treat or cure any disease or physical condition, neither does FSM take the place of one's medical doctor. I am not covered by insurance policies or worker's compensation. I work through a service for pay contract with clients, who are mostly referred through other clients, sports agents, coaches, dentists, lawyers and medical doctors. I charge by the hour and the rate varies by appointment type.

After FSM it is common that clients report a series of some soreness, sleepiness, headaches, drainage, an increase in elimination/bowl movements, increased blood flow and/or nerve function to different areas of the body, and other "unwinding" symptoms for up to 3 weeks or more. Our recommendations are to hydrate well (2 quarts of water in the 2 hours following treatment is recommended). Some clients may require or request additional appointments. I encourage clients to contact me in regards to any discomfort, side effects or concerns at any time after treatment.
